The aim of this journal is to open up various horizons in the field of History and related disciplines. The journal encourages the research and redefinition of existing or popular theme(s) that could offer policymakers pragmatic options within an intellectual framework.

We, therefore, welcome well-researched papers in the field of History, International Relations, Gender, Development Studies, Sociology, Political Science and other related disciplines. While we are open to a wide range of geographical scope, preferences are given to papers that address the problem of development and underdevelopment of the African continent.
